About the Graduate Programs in Counseling Psychology (GPCP) at Arcadia University:

The GPCP prepares highly qualified mental health clinicians for positions in schools, community mental health centers, hospitals, and other health agencies, business and industry settings. Throughout the program students are given ample opportunity to integrate coursework with firsthand experience by learning and practicing skills needed to be highly effective, culturally competent and ethical providers of mental health care to diverse populations. Graduates will also use their ever-growing base of knowledge and skills to provide evidence-based therapy to achieve positive clinical outcomes.

Arcadia's masters program offers four specialization tracks: Child/Family Therapy; Community Counseling Psychology, School Counseling (Elementary/Secondary); and Trauma: Clinical Bases of Treatment and Recovery.

For more information contact: Eleonora Bartoli, PhD, Director of GPCP at bartolie@arcadia.edu or Carol Lyman, MA, Clinical Coordinator at lyman@arcadia.edu.

Learning Objectives — Participants will: 1) be able to describe the central tenets of dialectical behavior therapy (DBT) as an empirically-supported treatment modality; 2) have learned how DBT addresses clients' life and treatment interfering behaviors; 3) have learned the role and content of DBT skills groups; 4) learn ways to begin integrating DBT techniques into their practices.

About the Instructor — Susan Schack, PhD., received her doctorate in clinical psychology from Adelphi University. She worked at St. Luke's Roosevelt Hospital Center in New York City for 5 years and was intensively trained in DBT during that time. She then went on to serve as the Assistant Director of Fordham University's counseling center in NYC. Dr. Schack is currently in private practice in NYC and Philadelphia where she works with individuals and couples with a variety of presenting problems, including depression, anxiety, substance abuse, eating disorders and personality disorders. She also runs DBT groups at The Center for Motivation and Change, a treatment center for addiction, in NYC.
